Let's read the first part of a story...

There was a great excitement in the Harrison house. For the first time in five years, all the members of the family would be together at home for Christmas.

When Christmas day dawned, Meg, the eldest daughter, was the first to join her mother in the kitchen: "Happy Christmas, mom!", she said. "It's good to be home". Then came Jane, the youngest daughter, looking for a cup of coffee and saying: "Merry Christmas!"

Just then, the Harrisons' next-door neighbor, Mr. Foster, came round with a Christmas card which had been delivered to the wrong address.

"I can see you're all busy and so I won't stay", he said. "Have a good Christmas!"

The Harrison family all helped to prepare the Christmas dinner and a magnificent dinner it was too, with a huge turkey and a delicious Christmas pudding. At the end of it everyone was very full!

After reading...

- What were the expressions used for the special occasion in the story?
- In what context were each of them said? e.g., when arriving, leaving, etc.

Let's continue reading the last part of the story...

Boxing day, the day after Christmas, was Mrs. Harrison's birthday. She said that, at her age, she wanted to forget about her birthday, but her husband and children were determined to celebrate it.

Beth took her mother breakfast in bed, saying: "Happy birthday, mom!" The rest of her children came into the room and repeated the greeting.

Mrs. Harrison's sister, Anna, who lived in America, had left a message overnight on the answering machine: "Best wishes on your birthday", the message began.

There was a message also from Mrs. Harrison's young goddaughter saying: "Many happy returns! Have a great day! Sorry I can't be with you!"

The family were not really hungry after eating all that food on Christmas Day, but they all went out for dinner to celebrate their mother's birthday. Most of them had to leave the next day and they felt sad.

By New Year's eve there was only Jim left and as the bells for the new year begin to ring, he said, "Happy New Year, mom and dad".

"All the best for 2021, Jim!", said his mother.

"A good new year to you, Jim", said his father.
