Life Has Become a Slave of Modern Gadgets

Read the article and scan those unknown words.

- Robin S. Sharma, the famous author and motivational speaker says, "Cell phones, mobile e-mail, and all the other cool and slick gadgets can cause massive losses in our creative output and overall productivity." Modern life-style and man's increasing dependence on technology have literally affected his mental and physical faculties and capabilities adversely. Not only intelligence, the effect of technology and gadgets is visible on all aspects of his life. Machines, gadgets, vehicles, smart-phones, laptops, mp3 players, man cannot live for a second without technology.
- As a consequence, he has become physically, mentally, socially, spiritually, emotionally weak! The present signs of his decadence do not augur well! If he fails to check his dependence on technology and gadgets, he may become utterly incapable of surviving any longer on this planet. The ever increasing indexes of patients in the hospitals of the world are a red-signal for man. He must learn to use technology wisely and appropriately. After all excess of everything is always bad! He must use these gadgets as he uses other things for example, stove, shoes, water-tap, house, car, pen, bed, etc. He uses them only when they are required. However, his overuse of some of the gadgets such as smart phone, computer, TV, etc. are killing his time. They don't let him use his other faculties. He must wean himself off these gadgets before it is too late!
- He must use gadgets wisely. He must not be over dependent on them. Though they have become an integral part of man's existence, yet he must use his faculties optimally. He must give due exercise to his body, mind and soul. Otherwise the dependence on gadgets will render him weak physically, mentally, emotionally, and spiritually.

Understanding Urban Shoppers

Match those questions that define urban shoppers' characteristics to their answers

- A. Neighborhoods like Philadelphia's Nicetown over-index in household retail expenditures despite having lower incomes, while middle-class residents of a neighborhood like Detroit's Convent Gardens spend proportionately less at retail. This means that shoppers may have distinctly different needs and values than residents from other neighborhoods, even within the same city.
- B. Neighborhoods where households showed significant spending at specialty grocers, but did so outside of their home neighborhoods. We then observed that these shoppers showed above-average preference for healthy food trends. We advise stores to feature these healthier products in their targeted promotional communications and in-store displays, to sway these shoppers to consider the store for a fill-in trip.
- C. The smaller store footprint, combined with smaller living spaces and smaller families, make smaller packages the best fit for shoppers. This also means the retailer must be savvier about how they tailor their product selection.
- D. anyone who is shopping within the boundaries of an urban area. This includes residents who live within the city boundaries and outside commuters who enter urban areas during the weekdays.
- E. Neighborhood Factor noted that the same drugstore chain in a "historically hip", neighborhood like Atlanta's Castleberry Hill should be stocking trendier items like craft beers, "superfoods," and LaCroix water compared to a comparably affluent, but more sprawling residential neighborhood like Albuquerque's Quintessence.
- F. we found that shoppers within a city's central business district act similarly regardless of whether they are residents or commuters. Since they are less likely to be driving than non-urban shoppers, they have smaller basket sizes and more focused shopping intentions. In some cases, they may be looking to replenish a single item between their stock-up shopping trips.

- 1. How do merchandising strategies differ in urban markets?
- 2. How do you define the "urban shopper"?
- 3. Where are the best locations in urban settings for major retailers?
- 4. Are there different types, and how do they differ?
- 5. What does it mean to have an "urban store format"?
- 6. What do urban shoppers value most?
