What are Phrasal Verbs?

Phrasal verbs are very common in spoken English, especially in informal (casual) speech.

A phrasal verb is similar to an idiom — it is a phrase that has a special meaning.

Phrasal verbs have a main verb and another word that is usually either an adverb or a preposition. Sometimes they have both, and adverb and a preposition.

With a phrasal verb (*verb + adverb), the position of the object (a noun) is flexible, i.e., it can sit either between the verb and the adverb or after the adverb:

- She picks the phone up.

(The object "the phone" is between the verb and the adverb.)

or

- She picks up the phone.

(The object "the phone" is after the adverb.)

With prepositional verbs (*verb + preposition), the position of the object—regardless of whether it's a noun or pronoun—is not flexible. The object must sit after the preposition:

- We had to hold on for a while.

Let's read about the economy... (1)

Focus on pronunciation and speed only.

These days, many of us are living in tough times. The economic crisis is making life difficult for many people in this country. We're all having to economize and cut back on our spending. Nowadays there is less credit available in the money markets and this is having a knock-on effect in our lives.

Unemployment is going up and house prices have gone down over the last few years. The Bank of England used taxpayers' money to bail out many of the banks which were facing insolvency due to their poor investments in so-called 'toxic assets' (many of them originating in the American sub-prime real estate markets). The government lowered interest rates to help people pay off their bank loans and mortgages. VAT was lowered to 15% in order to encourage us to splash out in shops up and down the country and inject more money into the economy.

Some people are not being affected so seriously; particularly the wise individuals who have saved up their money in secure savings accounts. When they need to, they can just dip into their savings in order to pay for an unexpected household repair or a much-needed holiday. But for many of us, we just have to get by every month on our monthly salaries. It's not easy though, particularly in London where everything is so expensive. We try to pay off our loans and mortgages while trying to avoid taking too much cash out of the many cash machines which are available to us all over the city.

Focus on pronunciation and speed only.

The energy companies seem to be ripping everyone off with the price of oil and electricity. It's almost as though they're using global warming as an excuse for charging us extortionate amounts for our energy, even though wholesale market prices have dropped in recent months. There's something rotten going on somewhere.

Big companies and banks seem to get protection from the state, while the average taxpayer has to pick up the pieces by working harder, cutting back on our spending, moving into more modest accommodation, or accepting badly paid work because we have no choice. Perhaps it has to be that way – the big companies have to be protected in order to support the economy. It just seems a little unfair that's all, and I'm sure there are some CEOs and directors who are still doing very well while the rest of us struggle to get by.

Still, it's not all bad. The lower interest rates on bank loans and mortgages mean we don't have to pay back so much money each month, and there is now so much freely available entertainment on the internet that it's quite easy to have a good time without reaching too deep into our pockets.

Go back to the texts and find phrasal verbs...

- Write them in the chat and explain
why you think they are phrasal verbs.

Discuss

- What do you think is the difference between a phrasal verb and an idiom?
- What similar characteristics do both, phrasal verbs and idioms have?
