- VOCABULARY AT THE KITCHEN

Welcome to Campus Live!

- How are you doing?
- Where do you live?
- Why are you taking a Business English course?

Cut, Chop, Slice, or Dice?

In this class we will go through vocabulary and phrases used in the kitchen...

- ✓ Explain the difference between the verbs above? When do you use them? Add a noun if possible.

Phrasal Verbs and Collocations

In everyday use, phrasal verbs and collocations are important for advanced-level English because they allow for more nuanced and natural communication. They help express ideas with precision, convey subtle meanings, and make language use more authentic.

Understanding and using common phrasal verbs and collocations contribute to fluent and effective everyday conversations, adding depth and sophistication to language expression. Additionally, they are prevalent in casual spoken English, making them essential for those aiming to communicate at an advanced level in various social situations.

Alice and Ben are in the Kitchen

Preparing Dinner...

Alice: Ben, could you pass me the olive oil, please?

Ben: Sure, here you go. What are you making?

Alice: I'm going to sauté some vegetables for the pasta sauce.

Ben: Sounds delicious. Need any help?

Alice: Yes, could you chop up the onions and garlic for me?

Ben: Of course. (starts chopping) How finely do you want them?

Alice: Just a rough chop is fine.

Ben: Got it. (finishes chopping) What's next?

Alice: Could you preheat the oven to 350°F?

Ben: Sure thing. (sets the oven temperature) Done. Anything else?

Alice: Yes, could you grate some cheese for the pasta?

Ben: Absolutely. (grates the cheese) How much do you need?

Alice: About a cup should be enough.

Ben: All done. What's next?

Alice: Could you check if we have any canned tomatoes in the pantry?

Ben: Sure, I'll go look. (returns) We have two cans. Do you need both?

Alice: Yes, please. Can you also open them for me?

Ben: (opens the cans) Here you go. What's the plan for the tomatoes?

Alice: I'll use them to make the base for the sauce. Thank you for your help!

Ben: No problem. I'm excited to taste the final dish!
